In today's gospel we are told of how Jesus drove away an "unclean spirit" that controlled the life of one of the people he encountered. Mark's term "unclean spirit" is a metaphor or symbol for the tendency to evil that we can all sometimes allow to control our actions. The desire to get even, allowing our anger to control us, being afraid to speak out in the face of manifest injustice, allowing selfishness to contaminate our decision-making are all manifestations of "unclean spirits" at work in our lives.

By releasing others from whatever controlled and troubled them, Jesus made real the love, and compassion of God to a people who had come to experience oppression and injustice. The invitation is for us to do likewise.
